Roles and responsibilities of a Consulting Civil Engineer

Types of services to be performed by Civil Consultant will be as below:

1. Consultant himself should be of the expert knowledge and the experience of a consulting civil engineer.
2. Consultant has to carry out some study and investigation which involve analysis and simple computation while others may require field trips to observe and inspect equipment or structures. It may involve a review of studies, reports, investigations or communications prepared by other engineers or by Mint management.
3. To prepare feasibility report. Feasibility reports are concerned with determining the feasibility of some projects while presenting the results of surveys, studies and investigation carried out to confirm the engineering solution to be adopted in line with the financial cost. A feasibility study will usually include such items as purpose of study, requirements and needs of project, alternate solutions, estimated cost, recommendations and conclusion.
4. To prepare Engineering Design. Engineering design is the process of determining the physical characteristics and dimensions of a structure or project to be constructed or manufactured. These characteristics and dimensions are presented graphically on drawings, commonly referred to as blueprints by the layman. Such drawings, or plans, are supplemented by written documents called specifications.

Plans and Specifications are used to direct the contractor or the manufacturer on the details of work expected from him. Frequently, the design process includes the preparation of detailed lists of materials called bill of quantities which is used to procure all the materials needed for the construction or manufacturing work.

5. The consulting civil engineer has to assist the mint in the selection of contractors or in the purchase of materials for the award of contracts. Procurement usually involves the receipt of a proposal from one or more material suppliers and selection is made on a competitive or a negotiated basis.

Mint contracts are usually awarded on the basis of competitive bidding while the engineer will normally prepare the contract documents in addition to drawings and specifications in conjunction with the Mint management.

With the plans, specifications and contract documents, bids are solicited from contractors or manufacturers through public notices issued in accordance with requirements. After the receipt of all interested tenders, bids are opened and tabulated, consulting civil engineer will go through and will make his recommendations to the mint.

6. General supervision involves the following:

- a) Preparing detailed tender drawings on agreed design basis.
- b) Preparing tender documents and calling tenders in line with proposed schedule.
- c) Assessing and reporting on tenders received and assisting for making fair and appropriate recommendations.
- d) Preparations of contract documents.
- e) Technical supervision of works in progress including site visits and attendance at meetings as are necessary to advice on the general standard and conduct of the works.
- f) To review progress of project jointly at suitable interval to ensure proper coordination and smooth implementation of works. To carry out final inspection of the works to meet the requirements.
- g) To assist/certify the general correctness of the progress payment claims.
- h) To assist/certify the practical completion and final completion of the works.
- i) Periodic visits to site
- j) Consultation with the mint management
- k) Interpretation of plans and specifications
- l) Checking working drawings and data
- m) Processing & certification of contractor's payment estimates
- n) Preparation of amendments to contractor's contract
